NEW EDGEWATER AMUSEMENT PARK OPENS THIS MONTH

Recreation Center On Seven-Mile Road Near Grand River To Cost Million

H. P. Eger, president of the Detroit Amusement Corporation, has announced that Detroit's new and largest amusement park, located on Seven Mile road west, between the Southfield road and Grand River avenue, will open this month.

This park is accessible by three main highways, Telegraph road, Grand River avenue and West Seven Mile road.

The new park comprises forty acres of scenic beauty, the River Rouge running through the entire property. The river is being dammed to form numerous islands and a lagoon, and the park will rank as one of the finest parks in Michigan upon completion.

The site was purchased from John and Emma Krave, it being formerly their estate. The ultimate cost of improvements will be approximately one million dollars. Improvements on the site will include the airplane ride and about twenty-five other concessions. In addition there will be large sheltered picnic grounds and the largest semi-open ballroom in Michigan, under the management of Jean Goldkette. The park is the latest design of John A. Miller, park engineer.

Many Attractions. Bands, fireworks and other attractions will be used during the 1927 season. There will be no gate admission. Parking space will be provided for five thousand cars. Arrangements are to be made with the D. S. R. for street car and bus service to the property.

This project has no connection with the park at Belle Isle, although it is financed by Detroit capital. The management believes that Detroit will support a park that is well lighted and well policed and where rowdism will not be tolerated, providing a beauty spot for the better class who appreciate clean amusements.
