A MARRIAGE REQUIRES A LOT OF PREPARATION TO SUCCEED

The day you both say, "I do," is not really the beginning of your marriage, but it should be the culmination of a lot of preparation and discussion of the issues that are likely to become points of contention after the ceremony. These can include a wide range of topics, such as how many children, money matters, working wives, religion, division of household chores, recreational activities and a host of other things. All of these should be ironed out beforehand, so that the only surprises that await you newlyweds will be pleasant ones. However, if some problems do arise, go to your House of Worship, which you should do in any case, and talk to your clergyman about them. After all, he performed your marriage; perhaps he can help you save it.

A marriage without conflicts is almost as inconceivable as a nation without crises.
-Andre Maurois
