Youth Clubs Keep Kids In Church

Drop by the Village United Presbyterian Church in Redford Township any Wednesday afternoon after school and you'll find a bunch school and you'll find a bunch of seven and eight-year-olds singing, playing or hearing Bible stories.

If you get there after 6 p.m. Wednesday, you see high school students in a fellowship of dinner, Bible study and youth choir.

Similar busy doings for fourth to sixth graders are in evidence Thursday afternoon, and junior highs also have a program Thursday.

IN ALL, about 180 young churches around the country, people in the church take part in the program that is known as Youth Club. And that necessarily involves regular, teachers and aides and, mother's to help prepare the snacks served to the younger to take the place of Sunday to the country of the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the country of the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the country of the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to take the place of Sunday to the program is not meant to the program is not program is not meant to the program is not meant t elders of the church work with the junior highs in the com-municants' program.

"The elders must test communicants before they join the church." Mrs. Mc-Causland said, "and this way they get to be friends as well.

"The function the Youth Clubs seem to fill well is guiding young people to a personal relationship with God. And the key word is loving relationship with other people."
