The man in the gray flannel suit has been retired from the boardroom. Enter the business executive in a loosely constructed, off-toned suit, single- or double-breasted, with an untied shirt, either striped or solid, topped by neckwear that doubles as a piece of art.
"The darker the dressier suits are rich and deep in solids, pin-and-chalk-striped navy and grays," said Thomas McCracken, Crowley's executive vice president. "Shirts are white and solid pastel in color . . . back to gray . . . very strong in every hue from heather to deep."
"Fall '92 brings a return of the classics . . . with furnishings playing an important role," said Marilyn Connor, public relations director at Neiman Marcus at The Somerset Collection in Troy. "Ties are dressy, with wovens and repps being the major part of the selection."
"Shirts are both patterned and solid while the white shirt prevails as the essence of proper dressing. Pattern mixing continues to offer the wearer a way to dress with individuality. The final touch is the white handkerchief of linen or fine cotton."

The Longest Yard: Button-down, slit, black wool skirt ($200) expresses the chic understated styling of the Champs Elysee. The slim silhouette is heightened with a crisp white cotton blouse ($140). The finishing touch: a classic French beret. At Jaeger, The Somerset Collection, Troy.
