In her acceptance of the award, Fox thanked many — from the city council and its members, to individuals also responsible for the preservation of historic sites like the Botsford Inn.

Fox called the award "not an achievement of one person, but of an entire community."

Fox says the community has pulled together for projects like the History Room in the library and that the community should continue to educate its residents — especially its children — of its history.

"Farmington is not like any other suburb," she said. "It's had a long and noble history. There are things that people need to know. Every student should know why America is what it is — it gets to be what it is through places like Farmington Hills."

Fox, who recently attended a symposium in Washington, D.C., called "The White House: the First 200 Years," said preserving Farmington Hills history has been difficult because historic sites are scattered throughout the area, not concentrated in a central district.

So protecting sites like the Spicer House requires much effort. And publishing books on Fred Warner and local artists means investing profits from one book to publish another.

"We don't do it for money," Fox said. "We do it for love."

Communities that don't preserve history "lose whatever makes them unique, their integrity," Fox said. But Farmington Hills has made efforts to preserve its history.

"To have these things available, visual evidence of the past, gives kids a sense of roots," Fox said. "A lot of people lived in this community — they've made it what it is."

ing. Williams and his mother entered the Hills station to straighten out the situation, police said.

He was arrested on a warrant issued earlier for charges of armed robbery, kidnapping and unlawfully driving away an automobile.

"He saw his picture on TV and knew he wasn't guilty — so he turned himself in," said Lawrence G. Kaluzny, Williams' attorney.

Kaluzny said that Williams was with his supervisor, a priest, the day of the carjacking and that people were willing to testify to his whereabouts. Kaluzny also said Williams was willing to take a lie detector test and to stand in a police line-up.

"Lots of times you get clients that say they're not guilty," Kaluzny said. "But from the first time I met Williams, he said he didn't do it. Everything he said was consistent with his innocence. He's been in jail for several days and this poor kid is innocent."

At the arraignment hearing Nov. 6, Williams had stood mute to the charges and a not guilty plea was entered on his behalf. He was held on a $50,000 cash bond.

Hills Sgt. Charles Nebus said the police are actively seeking another suspect and hope to make an arrest soon in the case.

Downed pole hits school headquarters

High winds Thursday night felled a telephone pole which hit and knocked out power at Farmington school headquarters, the Lewis Schulman Administration Building.

The building houses the administrative offices of the Farmington Community school district.

No one was injured, school officials said.

"There's minimal damage," said Don Cowan, director of building and student services for the district. "A telephone pole broke off and fell at the southwest side of the building. We couldn't go into the building at all for two hours."

Thirty school employees relocated to the Ten Mile School building.

"When we pulled up, (in the morning) the pole was leaning up against the building."

Power was expected to be fully restored by late Friday, Cowan said.
