

Holiday videos require preparation

LARK SAMOUELIAN

CABLE CONNECTION
The holiday season is upon us with gatherings of individuals, whom we may not have seen throughout the year, as well as decorations in abundance. As you go about becoming involved in these activities, be sure to think about a treatment for your television program.

Please create video in your mind, keeping the artistic balance foremost. If you have an opportunity to take a video camera with you, shoot a long segment of video of any given scene. This will serve as a good visual for the introduction or outro for your program.

The idea does not end here. Once you have completed this video and have proceeded on with your program, take the visual footage that captured your attention and put it on a tape to store just this type of thing.

Down the road, even next year, you will find this to have been a very productive way to accomplish time management, as the pace picks up from year to year.

The individuals that you meet, be they friends, family or acquaintances met at a party, all have characteristics which you may want to incorporate with your television programming.

They will get a kick out of being part of a television show, and you may have captured yourself a dynamic, powerful voice, for example, or a person who represents a particular good character, an announcer, or possibly someone who is great at sound effects and a lot of fun at a party would make a perfect audio to a variety program.

Sharing your interest in community television like this cannot help but extend the holiday season beyond the first of January. Good luck — we look forward to seeing your programming on Channel 12.
