the best sentence possible under the circumstances.

"I think all parties were agreeable to this sentence," Pitta said. "It appeared that there was little or no chance of being successful (if the case went to trial). We made the best of a bad situation."

More than that, Pitta put on the record that he wanted his client's sentence to run concurrently with any sentence Scarborough would receive for violating his parole for the Texas murder. He had served 10 years of a 50-year sentence for that crime before being paroled and returning to Michigan in 1990.

Tyner said she would expect any sentence for a parole violation be served consecutively, or after Scarborough served his time in Michigan. Had he been on parole from a Michigan prison, that would be the case.

Texas department of corrections officials said Scarborough would likely be taken back to the Leno Star state after he served his time in Michigan and his case would be reviewed.

"When we hear (from the Michigan Department of Corrections) that he is eligible for parole, we'll recommend to the parole board that he come back and do some more time," said Dan Guerra, public information officer with the pardons and paroles division of the Texas Department of Corrections in Austin.

"I think I've been too busy to worry or to think too much about that," Lauhoff said. "From the time you come here in the morning until the time you go home, there's so many things going on. Before I walked in here (city manager's office), I wondered, 'Once I walked in here, I haven't really thought about it.'"

Lauhoff spent three months working with Deadman, who retired Jan. 4. The former public safety director received a crash course on the sewer project's finer details and other aspects of the job.

Then Jan. 5, his first day as city manager, arrived.

Since then, Lauhoff's been busy.

He's had a Downtown Development Authority meeting and a council session. The latter proved eventful.

During the public comments, a man enlightened Lauhoff and the council about airplane de-icer contaminating water runoff and affecting, among other things, women's douches.

Otherwise, Lauhoff has been consumed by one of the city's largest undertakings.

'You don't lock yourself up in an office. That's why you'll see me in the field a lot.'

Frank Lauhoff
Farmington city manager

The sewer project is near completion. Testing has started; the sewer could be operating by the end of the month.

The city must decide whether it will operate the sewer line and pumping station or contract the service out. Oakland County Public Works is contracted for the task the first three to four months.

Beyond that, Lauhoff sees other issues. Some older subdivisions will need new water mains and streets.

He wants to enforce ordinances to eliminate blight. Keeping with his concerns about the environment, he wants to see new trees planted.

Also, Lauhoff wants to foster the working relationship between Farmington and Farmington Hills.

The true test for any city manager comes before the council. Deadman and the council had a harmonious relationship. Lauhoff doesn't expect that to change.

Being new, though, his opinion might be more readily challenged.

"I guess I don't know," he said. "I guess the way I work is to provide city council with all the information I have to help them make their decision. They're going to have the same information I have. Whether that's a different change from the past, I don't know. I welcome their input."

Lauhoff sees his role as part point man and guidance counselor. In the clock tower flap, it was Lauhoff who pointed out the plan would have to be approved by the Planning Commission and go before the Historical Commission for public input first.

Lauhoff sees it all a part of being involved.

"You don't lock yourself up in an office. That's why you'll see me in the field a lot. You'll see me on the streets. You'll see me out there looking at what's going on. That was his way, too."

DRUGS AS A CAUSE OF ARTHRITIS

As you know, there are many types of arthritis: rheumatoid, osteo, psoriatic, gouty arthritis, lupus arthritis, bowel disease arthritis etc.

As each arthritis has its own course and treatment, your doctor often feels obligated to make an exact diagnosis. His problem is multiplied because your therapy for other conditions may include medicines which themselves cause joint pain.

For example, IRIH is an excellent drug for tuberculosis. However, a side effect of the drug is an arthritis that acts like rheumatoid arthritis. If you are taking a "water pill," you may be at risk for the drug. The pill may prevent the excretion of uric acid, the chemical that irritates gout, and cause the substance to build up to an attack level. A medicine to lower cholesterol may cause achy joints throughout your body.

Caution shows that treatment with arthritis medicine to counter the offending drug will not work. The only way to stop drug induced arthritis is to discontinue the errant medication.

When your physician asks about other medical conditions and medications he is not being curious or polite. He is undertaking a vital part of your arthritis evaluation.
