wearing a ruffled top or dress it down with a plain T-shirt for the beach."

City Limits, an off-price store, began to stock psychedelic cotton tops and '70s-inspired print skirts by Reference Point, Art Works, Live in Color and other makers right after Christmas. The owners expect the look to be popular because of its versatile style and fabric options.

Says M.J. Burns, Hudson's fashion director, who grew up in the '70s: "I loved the ('70s) fashions when I was a preteen, but my mother wouldn't let me wear everything I wanted. I'm still young enough, so this season I'm embellishing my wardrobe with everything."

At Hudson's, '70s fashions by Levi, Trends and Designs will be strongest in juniors. Keyhole dresses (cut-outs in the bodice) and sheer formal wear by designers like Liz Claiborne, DNKY and Carole Little also will show up in Hudson's Oval Room and better sportswear department.

■ 'I loved the ('70s) fashions when I was a preteen, but my mother wouldn't let me wear everything I wanted. I'm still young enough, so this season I'm embellishing my wardrobe with everything.'

M.J. Burns

Burns suggests wearing the new platform shoes (much lower than the six-to-eight-inch soles of the '70s) in nubuck and colored leathers with suits; mules and platforms with open-toes and cork soles are a good match for capri pants and tunics.

If you want the real thing, Cinderella's Attic in downtown Royal Oak may be the only place in metro Detroit to find used and never worn '70s clothes, which co-owner Heidi Lichtenstein harvests from the backrooms of clothing stores around the country.

Besides a pair of glittery eight-inch platform boots (which came from Lichtenstein's own closet), Cinderella's Attic has polyester bell-bottoms, shirts with "747" collars, psychedelic vests and even mood rings, all new. The store also carries '70s-inspired clothing from new makers, such as Fun House, Island Electric and Cykxtees.

By far, the most requested '70s got-up is bell-bottom pants and platforms. Yet, the customers most interested in finding these vintage clothes are age 17 to 22, says Lichtenstein.

"They want '70s clothes because they've never worn them before," she said. "Maybe their parents were hippies and they saw them dressed this way in pictures."
