Monde' explores classical master

Little is known about Sainte Colombe, the French master of the viola who lived a reclusive life in 16th century France. "Tous les Matins du Monde," a 1991

French film currently at the Maple, successfully fills in the gaps of the fascinating musician's Colombe (Jean-Pierre Martielle), so mysterious his first name len't known, never gets over the death of his wife. He locks himself away in a tiny cabin be-hind his elegant home and prac-tices literally all day, adding a sevenia aring to his viola for a seveniu string to his viols for a richer sound.

Liko father: Guillaume Depardieu plays a young Marin Marais while his father Gerard plays the aging Sainte-Colombe protege in "Tous Les Matins Du Monde."

He raises two daughters with a firm hand, teaches them the instrument and stages recitals that become all the rage with the French court. The King's chief violinist offers him a sext as a royal musician, but stubborn Sainte Colombo declines. Titles sunlight in my hand, not gold, "he anaris. Marin Marais, a bitter young man of 17, hears of Sainte Colombo's greatness and saks to become his pupil. The story that follows takes some depressing and strangely triumphant turns as Marin enters a complex relationship with both Colombe and his daughters.

Tolnette and Madeleine (Carole Richert and Anne Brochel) look like they've never set foot off the property, so it's no suprise that they're fascinated by the young, passionate Marin. Madeleine, the eldest, falls hardest and sinks into the deep family funk when he ultimately dumps

The ubiquitous Gerard Depar-dicu plays Marin as an old man, head of musicians at Versailles, who interrupts rehearsal at the court to recall in vivid detail the story of his former master.

As young Marin, Depardieu's real-life son Guillaume has twice as much screen time as his fa-mous father. He's also quite fetching; his wispy build, long blonde hair and aquiline nose more closely resemble English actor Julian Sanda.

"Tous les Matins du Monde" tells us that talent is pure and that music can be found in the simplest things. The soundtrack shows the range of the viola (which, according to Marais' narration, could evoke both the sighs and screams of the human voice) while celebraing the sounds of silence, or rather the sounds that slowly come from it.

This becomes one of Sainte Colombe's most important teachings. He takes Marin to the home of an artist friend and tells the boy to listen to the intricate brush strokes. If you can hear them (or think you possibly could), you've probably enjoyed the movie and gotten at least part of its point.

Sitching around to listen to the paint day may be more exciting for other viewers, who will find the story stiff and depressing.

If you want a lively reading of the classical masters, watch "impromptu" or "Amadeus," which unfortunately the movie has been compared to in the advertising. If you want a thoughtful, insightful, emotionally draining glimpse at the auffering that sometimes enters the artistic process, eath "Tous les Matins du Monde."

Law and order: History holds some answers

Voice mail message: Barbara, I have just

I have just read your article, "Guns change reaponse for coming of age in the '90s," and I want to know when SCHIFF take responsibility for their own actions in life and stop blauning objects for crime. People blame flashlights, cars, alcohol and firearms but these things are not at fault, people are.

things are not at fault, people are.
Further, what's the problem of children, the law and guns?
There are already laws on the books that are designed to control this. It is a felony for anyone under 21 to own handgun, it is a falony to carry firearms outside your own residence, if you are not 21 and/or you don't have a permit.
These are laws; these are felonies, and the parent or guardian should be held accountable and punished when they are broken. What is the problem, these acts are felonies and the laws should be end.

forced.

The answer is not more laws because the laws are slready there. They need to be enforced. People, take responsibility for what you do in life. You are in life where you put yourselfilt is up to you.

Dear Caller,

Dear Caller,

Thank you for the response to the article on guns. I share your opinion on this subject. A possibility on why these laws can't be enforced is that too little is spent on law enforcement because the money is not available or because atrong law enforcement would antagonize those electorates.

The following thoughts came to me while considering the initial question and your response.

Thomas Jefferson did not believe in a large government ruling the people. He believed that the people would govern themselves by God's principles. However, he recognized that some people would fall from the high road and be uniable to govern themselves and would cause difficulty to fellow citizens. He believed at this point that the government agencies would step in and do what was necessary to rehabilitate those who had fallen from grace.

'Mr. Frost' is a chilling look at evil

It's a dark night in the English countryside as two thleves break countryside as two thleves break into a garage, intent on stealing an Astin Martin. One complains the building smells like rats. Not a good sign. The pair, unaware they are being watched from a dark window in the mansion, beat e path out of there after a body falls out the driver's door of the it's daylight when a police in-spector, played by Alan Bates, ar-rives to find the homeowner lean-ing on his shovel out on the bed lawn. The man, the title character of the effective 1989 film "Mr. Frost" played by Jeff Goldblum, inn't the least aurprised to be via-tical buther soller.

Bates is rather embarrassed to have to unofficially check on a story that two arrested car thieves a story that two arrested car thieves at the story that two arrested car thieves at the story that two areas and the story at the story areas and the story and adda he had just finished buying the body when the officer arrived.

The full magnitude of Mr. Frost's crimes soon become known as police find two dozan mutillated women, men and children buried on the property all tortured to death. Time peases and no one is able to learn snything about Mr. Frost, not his first name, age or nationality. Soon after his confession, Mr. Frost himself stops speaking.

After two years and stints in a couple different pyschiatric hospitals, Mr. Frost arrives at a new hospital. Kathy Baker Is the pyschiatrist who starts to find out about the real Mr. Frost.

The original police officer on the cass, Bates, has left his job and follows Mr. Frost from place to place. He's convinced Mr. Frost is nothing less than evil personi-fied, Satan in human form. Naturaily, the psychiatrists think Barrs is as delusional as their si-iont patient.

Mr. Frost, when he speaks to Baker, confirms Bates' position. Mr. Frost wants a return to the old days of straightforward battles between good and evil, day when people would sell their souls, simpler times which have been suppleated by science, particularly psychiatritry.

The crimes committed by Mr. Frost or actions induced in others are designed to show the world the true face of ovil and their impotence in stopping it.

Even in lighter films, Goldblum has a gloomy intensity that works very well in this role. His Mr. Frost is gib and charming, com-pletely logical yet capable of rage. Baker is also fine as his opponent chosen for her analytical medical mind. She doesn't believe in the dayil.

mind. She doesn't believe in the devil.

"Mr. Frost" has much more subtley than you might expect from a film that more or less falls into the horror genre. You don't see the video record Mr. Frost made of his crimes. The reaction of Baker as she watches says it all.

This is a film that hee a world in which psychiatrists have used science to banish the devil but maybe the devil isn't inclined to be forgotten.
