Getting ready for lunch is a team effort that involves students in many classes. They deserve extra credit for overcoming an awkward set-up — 90 percent of the cooking is done in the kitchen located in the basement, and food is cated in the basement, and food is brought up to the restaurant in an elevator for final prepping. Be sure to visit the bake shop after lunch. You'll find a variety of fresh baked products for sale at reasonable prices.

Sous chef Brian Henson, who graduated from the cullnary arts program last semester, helps Jeremy Hebda make the dressing — whipped cream and watercress. Chef Kevin Gawronski looks over Hebda's shoulder, picks up the whisk and gives him a couple of pointers. "Add some cayenne pepper," suggests Henson. "It hits you in the back of the neck and makes you want to take another bite."

The heat is on, but everyone is having fun, and learning at the same time. Their tasks must be completed by 11 a.m. when the next class takes over to serve the lunch crowd. Duties are divided, student chefs are assigned stations to prepare entrees that will be served in the restaurant. Wait teaff become familiar with the menu to answer customer questions.

"Customers test me," said second-year culinary arts student Margaret Healip. They want me to tell them about the menu. They ask how things are prepared."
