NBC hurries movie of doomed cult

what it was that attracted people to him initially, how he got people in and was able to manipulate them the way that he did."

Daly's research for the role included conversations with cult members.

"What I had to ask them as an actor was, 'What did you like about the guy?' And they all said that he was incredibly smart, that he obviously had a temper, but that he was real normal — he swore, he drank beer, he went out to listen to music at bars. He could be very friendly, loving, kind, but he was incredibly argumentative — he hated to be wrong, and he used his encyclopedic knowledge of the Bible to sway people to his point of view. One of the interesting things about the Bible — I've been studying it, and I never have before — is that if you have a specific agenda that you are trying to put forth, you can use the Bible to prove just about anything."

Daly recalls hearing Koresh's radio sermon from inside the compound, and finds a simple irony in its tone.

"What's pretty frightening is," Daly says, "the other day I found a radio station here in Tulsa, it was a religious station, and someone was giving a sermon. I don't know who it was, I don't know what it was on, but the scary thing is it really didn't seem any different. It was not that far away."
