"With everyone in the band we can't have one of the spectrum to that other; we can go from reggae to you name it, we can do it, but it will be ours." Pope added. "It won't be like we have to go out and play someone else's stuff."

"To me most albums you hear, if you heard one album and you go to the next one, you know them because you are expecting them to sound like that, whereas you might not know what you are going to get (with Billy Sunday). It will groove because you don't know what we are going to do."

As groovalicious as they are, the members know their sound may not appeal to all. And even though they will always be dissected and compared to others, the members are sure they will find a following.

"I feel we spend a lot of time musically writing our songs and lyrically, too, making intelligent and sensible lyrics to express what we believe, and I'm not really sure a 12-year-old girl can get into all that. Too much," Routledge said. "Not to say a 12-year-old won't hear a song by us and not like it; I think it's possible."

"I think the ultimate compliment for bands is to say, 'Oh man, they sound like us and so... I feel comfortable when people say, 'They sound like Billy Sunday.' That's what I want. I don't want people to compare us to someone else, I want someone to compare themselves to us."
