IN HOME IN THE CITY

The Department of Natural Resources nongame wildlife specialists have announced that Detroit is the first city in Michigant to boast the successful natural breeding and hatching of endangered peregrine falcon chicks in its downtown area.

Although several peregrines have been released by the DNR atop skyacrapers in Detroit and Grand Rapids, the last documented natural nesting of peregrines in Michigan was on a cillf in the Upper Peninsula during the 1950s.

A pair of adult pergrines sighted around the Book Building this spring have nested and produced two chicks, which were bunded by DNR biologists for identification and monitoring.

Pop and Judy, as the chicks were nicknamed, used a recessed window well, lined with pebbles, on a ledge on the 33rd floor of the Book Building as a nesting site. Two of the four eggs laid remained unhatched and were sent to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for analysis.

An earlier nesting attempt by two other peregrine falcons on the Fisher Building proved unsuc-cessful, but the immature female peregrine is still roosting there.

III FIRHING FACT

At least two million anglers a year fish for more than 50 species of game fish in Michigan's 38,000 squaro miles of Great Lakes wa-ters, 22,000 inland lakes and 36,000 miles of river.
