Farming As a Business

Agriculture is rapidly becoming an organized business. It is dividing along natural lines into separate fields of operation. Until recent years, the farmer endeavored to produce all his living from his farm. He raised a sufficient quantity of wheat, corn, potatoes, meat, fruit, etc., to satisfy the needs of his family. There was practically no market for the surplus. At present, however, there is a cash market for whatever products the farmer has to sell. This has made it possible for him to grow those products for which his land is adapted, and for which his training and tastes have specially prepared him to produce.

This modern trend in practical agriculture calls for a much greater degree of skill than the old method. If a man places all his eggs in one basket, he must be very certain that the basket does not fall on the way to market. If a man centers all his interests in one line of agriculture he should be an expert in that line. If he is not any failure will be disastrous. We are rapidly approaching a time when a man who is not a specialist and who does not know at least one branch of farming very well will be a back number and will be compelled to trudge along with a mere living while his neighbors with special training, following special lines of work, will live in better homes and enjoy luxuries which the untrained man cannot afford.

Our state has made it easy for the energetic young man to secure this special training. If he desires to gain special knowledge of live stock, dairying, poultry, husbandry, fruit culture, creamery management or general agriculture, he will have an opportunity to do so at a very small expense at the Agricultural College, East Lansing. The college upon request will mail free of charge, circulars giving information concerning the short courses offered in these special lines of work.

J. W. Greer, Greenwood, La., suffered a severe case of lumbago. "The pains were so intense I was forced to hypodermic injections for relief. These attacks started with a pain in the small of my back which gradually became fairly paralyzing. My attention was attracted to Foley's Kidney Remedy and I am glad to say after using this wonderful medicine, I am no longer bothered in any way with my old enemy, lumbago." Sold by T. H. McGee.
