Every hen you own is an egg factory. The feed you use is the hired man who runs the egg factory. Your hens produce only in proportion to the ability of the feed to make them produce.

Youd wouldn't hire the cheapest man you could get to help you on your farm. He'd waste time—make costly mistakes, and in the end be more expensive than a hetter man whose wages would be higher.

Don't select feed by the price tag, but rather by the eggs it will produce, and the condition in which it will keep your flock.

Why take chances with results when Larro Egy Mash will more than pay for itself in the extra production it gives you and in the health it will build into your flock?
