MEINTYRE AND HEATH, OLDEST STAGE PARTNERS, TO APPEAR IN DETROIT

McIntyre and Heath, the oldest and probably the best loved of any comedy pair the stage has known, and who only last week celebrated the forty-eighth anniversary of their theatrical partnership, are to present at the Shubert Detroit Opera House beginning Sunday night, October 28, their latest and undoubtedly most successful work, to which, the cheery title "Headin' South" has been given. The producers are said to have given "Headin' South," a particularly massive and elaborate production, and the big company, numbering 100 people, appears to have been selected with unusual care and discrimination. Special stress is laid on the fact that each of the two acts and nine scenes are spectacular and that the satirical display is of unusual brilliance.

Edgar Smith wrote the book of "Headin' South," Alfred Bryan supplied the lyrics and Jean Schwartz composed the music of which there are more than 20 numbers. In the large cast of principals perhaps those best known here are Frankie James, Jane Taylor, Bert Swor, Bud Williamson, Joe Randolph and Dixie Daisies. The Musical Bootblacks, and a big Broadway beauty chorus of nearly 100 young singers and dancers. The chorus have been selected not only for beauty, but for ability as vocalists and dancers as well. McIntyre and Heath are provided with characters of the type so successfully portrayed by them in "The Ham Tree" of which their present vehicle is admittedly legitimate and worthy offspring.

When Things
Are Not
What They Seem...

HALLOWE'EN

The carnival of ghosts, witches, hobgoblins and all sorts of spooky denizens—but they are not the queer people they appear to be, because underneath the fantastic make-up they're just folks the same as you and I.

Oftimes in life things prove to be very different from what they seem. Today the promise of continued prosperity and happiness presides; tomorrow impending adversity may stalk. There is one sure safeguard—a growing reserve fund in an institution like this one, that pays interest and assures safety.
