

Farmington's Main Street Forty Years Ago

Above is a picture showing what Farmington's main thoroughfare, Grand River Avenue looked like when the Enterprise was established. The plate from which this picture was printed, in the Tenth Anniversary Edition of the Enterprise in 1898, fortunately has been preserved through the 30 years, and was used in printing this page.

Where Many Went To School Years Ago

The "Farmington Union School" was graded 40 years ago, and, according to the Enterprise of 1898, in the next ten years, "Sent out 48 graduates who . . . have reflected great credit upon the thoroughness of work done while in the school room."

An Old Family Doctor

Remembered with affection by many old residents of the community is Dr. Joseph Moore, a family doctor, grandfather of Miss Marguerite Moore, a resident of Farmington.

The Owen House

Farmington's
Famed
Hostelry

Here The
Weary Traveller
Rested

"There is nothing of greater importance to a town than a good hotel, and in this respect Farmington is particularly favored," said the Enterprise of 1898 of the "Owen House," "Finest inland hotel in the State."