

We hope you have enjoyed turning back with us the pages of forty years, and that they may serve in some measure to strengthen the bond of community spirit between all whose eyes have scanned these pages.

It would scarcely be possible to conclude this Anniversary edition without some expression of appreciation—to our readers, whose interest and loyalty have continued throughout the forty years; to our advertisers, whose good-will and support have aided the Enterprise to go forward steadily in strength and standing; to all whose friendship and active co-operation has meant so much to us.

And now we hope you will be glad, too, to turn with us from the days that are gone, to those that are to come—with a better knowledge and a deeper understanding of Farmington's splendid past, to the building of a great and fine future.
