for the Lauder event. Dozens of make-up consultants dressed in navy and teal suits presided over tables draped in white linen at which four or five customers were seated right out on the selling floor. Lauder's experts helped their charges fine-tune personal make-up routines, educating them on a complex product line with new advances in skin care treatments.

"We have six different cleansers and over 80 different eye shadows and let's face it, that's a pretty complicated product line," Krebs said.

"Because of the expense and technicality of our products, it's important for customers to leave the counter knowing how to use them correctly. We hope this program does that. Women can practice and ask questions while they are applying products specially chosen for them by professionals."

Everyone interviewed said it was an answer to their prayers.

"I've wanted to do something like this for a long time," Kathleen Jess of Redford said. "We're traveling to Pennsylvania Saturday to watch the U. of M.-Penn college football game with my husband's old Navy buddy and his wife and I want to look especially nice. This is a great chance to get some personal attention."

Marilyn Zucker of Farmington Hills agreed. "I want to look better and find out what's new," she explained. "I've been a Lauder customer for years and I know the quality of the product. I just want to be sure I'm using it right."

Barbara Jeffries of Plymouth added, "Besides, it's just plain fun."

Lauder officials said they hoped to do $100,000 off the event. Each participant walked away with a personal product list and price chart for future reference. No pressure was placed on attendees to buy the merchandise. The seminars were free.

Many shoppers walking by the make-up tables, stopped to inquire how they could get a seat. Lauder may offer the workshop again in the spring.
