

In television production world, no one's an island

LARK SAMOUELIAN

Most everyone who has graduated from a television workshop enjoys practicing their newly developed skills. Sharing in one another's television shows is a great way to keep learning and reinforcing this information.

Every person gravitates toward a particular position. Remember that in television you don't go it alone. To accomplish a well-balanced show, you need the skills and creativity of many people.

Certification is accomplished after completing the MetroVision television workshop. A session consists of four three-hour classes. The instructors teach "hand-on" and the class actually produces a show, which is shown on Channel 12. Once certified, you may produce your own show or work on others.

SWOCC functions as a clearing house to hook up the idea with the crew. If you're curious to view what is going on, call to find out the time of a day or evening taping. Come and sit in the studio and watch what is happening.

Television involvement at a local level is very gratifying. It also has two other important features. The studios are a great place to meet interesting people and be accepted for who you are. The other benefit is that, as you are doing all this, you are inadvertently learning state-of-the-art telecommunication terminology. You will automatically become a forerunner in understanding community service via the television medium.

Hospice dials up phone service for hearing impaired

Hospice of Southeastern Michigan has introduced a telephone service for the hearing-impaired.

The agency has introduced a teletypewriter, or TTY, to transmit messages between telephones equipped with a keyboard and display screen.

Hospice's TTY number is 559-0032. The TTY line is staffed 24 hours a day, seven days a week, by on-call nursing staff members.

In addition, several hospice staff members are able to communicate in sign language.

Additional information on the new service is available by calling the TTY number, or by calling.

Hospice's TTY number is 559-0032. The TTY line is staffed 24 hours a day, seven days a week, by on-call nursing staff members.

Anne Greco at 559-9209.

Hospice of Southeastern Michigan is dedicated to helping people live their final days in comfort and dignity. The organization cares for patients with terminal illnesses and provides support services to their families. It serves residents of Oakland,

Wayne and Macomb counties. Founded in 1980, it is the oldest and largest hospice service in Michigan and a leader in the national hospice movement.
