another culture. The artist describes them as "my own quirky geometry." He studied art of Italian and other cultures, and his influences include the contemporary painter Stuart Davis.

"(There's a) juxtaposition of patterns and colors all working together," he said. "The primary colors make it very American."

There's a balanced juxtaposition of the works to each other. One of the tiles would fit into a large square shape featured inside a plate.

Donoghue's process is much like that of printing, he said. Like a printer, he works with one layer of color at a time, building up the layers to create the design.

"I've always imagined working with papier-mache."

The surfaces of the pieces look as if they could be made up of strips of papier-mache or even cloth, with small, colored lines seeming to hold the strips in place as if they were sewing or staples.

Fiber artist
Actual thread and fabric are put to esthetic use in Nicholson's tapestries. Nicholson earned her master of fine arts degree from Cranbrook in 1982.

"I started weaving almost immediately in art school," she said.

"I like the process. I love cloth. I like making cloth, making the pattern. For me it lends itself to drawing as embroidery would."

Fiber art has a special "visual dimension" for Nicholson.

"You can be more detailed than paintings, you get all these little threads."

Like Cranbrook, the architecture and grounds are special at Monticello. Working with such materials as wool, rayon and silk and cotton brocade, Nicholson forms delightful images from Monticello that are as fresh as their originals.

They are placed in the museum in a way that balances with the outside. For example, the autumn leaves seen through a window and some of the colors in a tapestry on a nearby wall pick up each other. The bushes and grass in another window seem to be continued in the lush fiber renderings in the room.

Among the details featured in the fiber works are a screen and winged insects in a potting room, and shading on leaves of vegetables. One piece shows flats of seeds, another suspended flowers being dried. Long horizontal works show a garden and orchard, with houses and trees nearby. The many different types of produce at Monticello are represented in a series of squares, each square containing one vegetable or fruit.

Another part of Nicholson's work consists of small chairs with fiber renderings of peas, an artichoke or a garlic plant on their seats or backs. The legs of each chair resemble what would be growing from the featured plant.

"Cranbrook was a huge influence on me, a huge influence. The whole philosophy of the place, the architecture and . . . gardens too."

Sculptor

Leah, who earned his master of fine arts degree from Cranbrook in 1980, presents an installation called "Elements, Compounds and Complexes."

The display includes exploded- and stacked tables, and brings to mind the comment,

"Things change." Throughout is the sense of things moving from the crude to the refined — coarse material to fine. One stack features coal on the bottom and ferns on the top, with a table bearing dirt and another bearing grass in between. One ladder bears food-stuffs that are turning waxy and greasy. Another ladder bears what looks like paraffin. Light bulbs heat rock salt on another arrangement, slowly causing change as the exhibit continues.

Hours are 1-5 p.m. Wednesday-Sunday. The museum will be closed Dec. 24-25 and 30-31. Admission is $3 for adults, $2 for seniors and full-time students, free to children under age 7 and museum members. Guided tours offered to groups of 10 or more. Call 645-3323 for information or to book a tour.

Franklin Village set for jolly Holly Day Saturday

Holly Day, a traditional celebration of the winter season, will take place in historic Franklin Village Saturday, Dec. 4.

From 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m., carolers will be singing, Santa will be visiting, and chestnuts will be roasting on an open fire.

Most of the activities will take place around Franklin Village's Historic District and shopping areas on or near Franklin Road, south of 14 Mile and west of Telegraph. Holly Day is an annual event sponsored by the Holly Day Committee and with the support of most area merchants and community groups. For more information, call 855-1576.

Highlights of Holly Day will include special craft demonstrations, exhibits or offers from most Franklin merchants (as well as free refreshments), Santa's visit, a home tour, carriage rides through the historic district, a hike with a village-wide holiday lighting contest and the lighting of the tree on the grounds of the Franklin Library.

Exhibits include a rare collection of fine gemstones at Yankee Designs Jewellers, a psychic hand collection and jewelry trunk show at Mesa Arts and Handmade, International Santas at the Franklin Antique Gallery.

The Salvation Army band will provide some of the day's entertainment, and that sponsoring group is also the beneficiary of the Holly Day "Light Up a Life" sweater drive and proceeds from the hike sale.

Historical group decks halls for open house

The Oakland County Historical Society will have its Victorian Christmas Open House Sunday, Dec. 5, at Pine Grove, 405 Oakland Ave. in Pontiac.

For the holiday season, the museums and grounds will be decked out like a Currier and Ives print. The event, which represents the society's 25th annual observance of an old-fashioned Yule, will be open to the public noon to 4 p.m.

Donations are $5 for adults and $2 for children 12 and under. Tickets may be bought at the door. Pine Grove is one-half mile north of Wide Track Drive. For more information, call 338-6732.

Visitors may stroll through the mansion learning of its history and the life of Moses Wisner, who served as governor of Michigan just prior to the Civil War.

Live holiday music will be featured in the parlor. Youngsters may attend a Christmas pageant.
