STAR NOTES

Mr. Television comes to A&E's 'Biography'

BY TED KUSIO

His story is pretty much the history of television, which is one reason why Milton Berle deserves his nickname of Mr. Television.

A&E presents an episode of "Biography" based on his career when "Milton Berle: Mr. Television" premieres on Tuesday, March 15.

The show focuses on Berle's long history in the entertainment industry, including some fascinating clips from his early performances in vaudeville.

His mother encouraged the young Berle to become a performer, which led to roles in silent films with stars like Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford. From there it was on to success in vaudeville. He seemed unstoppable, until the silver screen and radio failed to embrace him.

But Berle was willing to try television back when it was new and uncertain, and that effort sent his fame skyrocketing. With the premiere of "Texaco Star Theater" in 1948, he entered the homes of America and the pages of history.
