Nolan's stage presence is spiced with Irish humor, he has a strong expressive voice, and plays the guitar and bodhran. He has just released his second cassette titled "Across the Great Divide," it is an album based on the immigration theme and features five original pieces as well as traditional and modern songs by contemporary writers.

One of his songs, "Far From Their Homes," was written about Grasse Isle, a burial ground in the St. Lawrence River for victims of the Irish famine.

Nolan is equally at ease with the traditional Irish ballad "Paddy's Green Shamrock Shore" as he is with his own "Curse of the Immigrant," a tender ballad about being torn between two lands.
