

Access channel tunes in name: INFO-TV 12

MARY LINDA CALDERONE

Your Community Access Channel has a new name. It's now INFO-TV 12. That stands for Information Network of Novi, Farmington and Farmington Hills in Oakland County.

Given all the upheaval with the networks changing channels here in the Detroit area, this new name will certainly help viewers remember us. And with all the channel choices (and continued talk of 600 channels right around the corner) it's nice to know that we are now more than just a number, and we'll stand out in the crowd. On top of that, with an easily recognizable name like this, we hope to have greater recognition as your community access channel.

It's easy to say, so go ahead and start calling it "INFO-TV-12."

Those of you who have never viewed INFO-TV-12 may be asking who lives, works or belongs to an organization in Novi, Farmington or Farmington Hills to use TV — free of charge.

That's right, there is still some place where you can get something for free. The talented crew at MetroVision is ready to teach you how to put together a show on the Scrabble game. And several seasoned veterans are bringing in guests from all over the state and country.

If you're too shy to get in front of the camera, then how about working behind the scenes? No experience necessary. The cameras and other technical equipment may seem intimidating. But, not to worry. Here's where the folks at MetroVision will show you the ropes. They offer TV workshops each month from November to June. After just one night a week, for four weeks, you are ready to enter the wonderful world of TV. Just think, some colleges require four years of course work, before you can touch the equipment. But in Community Access, it's hands-on, right from the start.

After that, if you wish, there are other specialized workshops you can take at both MetroVision studio on Enterprise Court in Farmington Hills or the INFO-TV-12 studio on Research Drive in Farmington Hills.
