Farmington joins in flow fray

Farmington has united with Farmington Hills to ask the Michigan Department of Natural Re-sources to rethink allowing wastewater to be sent from Commerce Township to the Rouge River basin, and through the city.

The city of Farmington has joined the fight against the expansion of a the fight against the expansion of a commerce Township facility, which would reroute treated wastewater through the area.

Farmington wants a hearing before the manner of the mann where it originates.

Parmington and Farmington Hills are included in the Rouge River basin. A tributary of the Rouge flows through City Park off Shlawassee Road.

"The issue is really a bigger one,"
Farmington City Managor Frank
Lauboff said, "and that's the MDNR's change of mind of moving it from one river basin to another."
Farmington Hills City Council has already requested a review. Farmington's council agreed to follow at its

Nov. 21 meeting.

The MDNR's granting a permit for such a project is inconsistent, Farmington ety officials say.

Farmington spent $13 million for a sewerage improvement project, which is designed to eliminate combined sewage overflow from going into the Rouge River. The city's efforts came at the unging of the MDNR.

However, crossa, rainfail or plant failure could mean untreated sewage would be flowing into the Rouge, city officials said.

Cheryl Cannon, Farmington Public Schools' new assistant superintendent for finance, always had a way with numbers.

In elementary 'school, her math teachers fostored competition and quick-drill' mastery by constantly putting, pairs of students to blackboard Jests. Cannon out-computed her peers.

"I was the quickest math student," Cannon sid. "I was always the last one standing."

As an 11-year-old, Cannon's father, who was a groomy store owner, often put his daughter in charge of the cash

FARMINGTON SCHOOLS Since 1987, Cannon has been assistant superintendent for business at Chippews Valley Schools.

Her responsibilities included over-all direction of the administratrative and clorical team. She was also re-sponsible for non-instructional dis-trict services like budgeting, account-ing, buildings and grounds.

She also handled facilities plan-ning, food service, purchasing, tech-nology and transportation.
