

Cage wizard from page 1C

He can spin four balls at once on miniature NBA life-like dolls ("I make them out of Kena," he says); playing a menacing Toronto Raptor; or sling a bow and arrow while honoring Native American Indians. He'll whip out his Ghostbusters' cassette as 20 kids dribble round the gym trying to pop balloons on the floor.

"The only routine I couldn't do today was shaving the girl's leg spinning the ball," he said. "There weren't any girls here today."

Schauer also gives away plenty of prizes such as Penny Hardaway

T-shirts or Clyde Drexler wristbands.

But Schauer also has a message to go along with his routine: stay away from drugs and alcohol, study hard, get good grades, and enjoy the game.

"Learn from the experts," Crazy George exhorts his campers. "Basketball is fun. The better you get, the more fun you have."

"And don't forget to thank your parents tonight for sending you to this camp. Don't wait, thank them tonight."

Holowicki said Schauer is well worth the cost.

"He covers the gamut, not just basketball," Holowicki said. "The money they pay him is more than gives back to the kids."

"He's a giver."

Schauer's own message to kids, however, was severely tested last year when he suffered injuries after being hit by a drunk driver in Pennsylvania.

"I was very lucky to be alive," he said. "I was laid up for three months and I got depressed. All I did was eat. I had to go through physical therapy just to raise my arm. I learned to appreciate the doctors and nurses."

"But I'm coming back. I had to follow my own advice I give to kids, but sometimes life is not easy."

"The kids have to realize their health is the most important thing. That's why I enjoy the schools and giving the anti-drug message."

Some may remember when Schauer was a full-time halftime showman for the Detroit Pistons, during the "Dick Vitale" days (1978-81). He performed at the NBA All-Star Game at the Silverdome and visited hundreds of schools during his Detroit stint.

"Bill Davidson (the Pistons owner), he's worth about $500 million now, isn't he," Schauer said. "I remember doing a personal show for his kid's birthday party. Those were the days."

During the past year, Schauer worked part-time for the Quad City (Ill.) Thunder of the Continental Basketball Association.

"It's fun to work the smaller markets," he said.

Schauer carts 50 basketballs along with him on tour, not to mention his chest full of props, prizes and sound system.

"The show is the easy part," he says. "It's the driving that's the tough. Setting up and tearing it down takes about one and a half hours. And there's no room in the car."
