

College hoop coaches scramble after late starts

A tale of two programs. Certainly, many people doubted Glen Donahue's sanity when he chose to coach Schoolcraft College over Madonna University. I mean, the logical choice would be the four-year basketball program instead of the two-year.

There were no winning traditions involved, that's for sure. Both schools have been mired in mediocrity — no, that's not right. Neither has been that good.

But Madonna at least had a reason for its struggles. It was a new program, just two years old; it was expected to have some problems the first few years. SC hasn't been any good at the junior college level for more than a decade.

So why would Donahue choose SC over Madonna?

His reasoning may never, truly, be known. That's because Donahue isn't the kind of guy to badmouth others. Indeed, he bit his tongue and swallowed hard when questioned about the St. Mary's College fiasco (after leading the Eagles to the NAIA Tournament twice), the administration dumped basketball and Donahue because of financial difficulties, and refusing to publicly take the open shot.

This much is known: Donahue had a choice between the two. He opted for SC, leaving Madonna to scramble. Fortunately, the Crusaders' administration was able to get another coaching leg-ende to step in: former Redford Catholic Central coach Bernie Holowicki.

Who will fare better? A difficult, and somewhat unfair, comparison to make.

But there were similarities in the two hirings. For one, both came late — too late to launch an effective recruiting campaign. However, the two coaches each have something to build around. Neither was facing an empty roster.

Still, as previously alluded to, both programs needed an overhaul.

And that's where the two coaches' approaches parted. Donahue had five players from last year, and two more who played for SC prior to that, to start with — not a bad foundation for a two-year school. He wasn't idle, though; he rounded up seven others who should help transform the Ocelots into a decent team.

Holowicki wasn't idle, either, but his efforts were less successful. His open tryouts, held throughout the summer at various sites, reaped almost nothing that will provide any help.

"We were looking for anyone who could play," the Madonna coach said. "We'll have to ride the rapids with what we have."

It's not all gloom, but it's hard to project much optimism after a 6-25 season. In Bill Sharpe's two seasons as coach, Madonna managed a meager 8-55 mark.

So saying just about everyone returns doesn't instill much confidence. And noting that two of the better Crusaders — leading scorer Jay Dimes and center Eric Furlotte — are the two losses from last season dims the picture further.

"Things are wide open," said Holowicki. "We've got about 16 guys, though, and that's good. There's a couple of good kids. . . . And the work ethic's gotten better."

"At least I was able to get a head on the kids that are there. That part (of the summer workouts) was good. I got to know them and they got to know me."

Holowicki was dissatisfied with the team's overall physical condition when he took over. That was one thing he feels he changed.

And, for now anyway, it will have to do. He doesn't plan further workouts until October, preferring to let his players acclimate themselves to their classes and schoolwork.

Donahue is through for now, too. But there's no doubt his late-season efforts will make a considerable, and immediate, difference. A program languishing in defeat, season after season, needed an instant boost.

The Hall of Fame coach supplied just that by bringing in seven players who measure 6-foot-4 or better.

As SC athletic director Ed Kavannah noted when asked about former SC coach Dave Bogatz, "Dave was a nice guy, but he just couldn't win."

Donahue will give SC victories — count on that. Holowicki will do the same at Madonna, it just may take a bit longer.
