

Condos

square feet with a two-car garage and basement. All six units will also have patios.

The condos will be Greek Revival in style to blend in with the neighborhood, which includes a mixture of architectural styles.

The exterior was more Victorian in flavor when Timely Construction presented its initial plan to the Historical Commission in September, said Tom Lyczkowski.

Commission members said they didn't feel a Victorian exterior was appropriate for that area. Houses in that area lean towards Greek Revival, said Lyczkowski, who is also an architect.

The farm house to be demolished was built around 1870 and was one of the first 18 houses to be designated in the Historical District. The house is vacant, city officials said.

"That's really unfortunate that has to happen," Lyczkowski said, "but considering the disrepair of the house, there are other considerations. That's where the city steps in."

"If someone had a couple of million dollars to restore a house, that would be great. But there's also a practical end."

Lyczkowski said the developer is trying to work with the community.

Genna has lived in Farmington "off and on" for 15 years. He has become enamored with the neighborhood.

He had site plan manager Carol Monzaka come up with an idea, which was presented to the city.

"It's our responsibility to look where these things can be accomplished... to maintain the character and maintain the property values," Luchoff said.

"If you don't work with developers, individuals will come in and build properties that don't fit in with the historical nature of the area."
