Bowling scorekeepers get crash course in computers

TEN-PIN ALLEY

AL HARRISON

Sometimes progress brings problems.

That's the case with so many bowling centers installing automatic scoring systems. It seems that a good number of the bowlers are unable to operate these systems by themselves and often ask for help.

In most instances, the bowlers have not taken the time to understand how they work. The basic system works great, but for those who are not used to computers, it can be intimidating.

There are several moves which are the most common for scorers. Let's see if we can help understand how they work, so bowlers can use them without calling for assistance.

There are several different types of scorers in use, but the most common in this area is the Brunswick AS-80/90. We will use this unit, since the basics are similar on all.

To make a correction in scoring, whether a bowler went out of turn or the pinfall was not correct, press correction on the key pad. Now select choice by number and enter information as prompted on the screen. The number one is score correction, two is out of turn bowler, three is remove bowler, followed by number four, which is bowler information change.

Five is frame erase and six is team information change (use this for any changes in team handicap). Remember after each entry or selection, press enter. For an absent bowler, press start, enter, start, then select from P (pacer), A (absent), R (regular) or S (substitute).

Select what is needed, then enter the names. After all names are entered, press bowl.

When your game is finished, be sure that all the scores have been written down on the scorecard. Press enter, clear, bowl, and you are ready to bowl the next game.

If there is any dispute after bowling is over, or someone's score was forgotten, ask the control desk for a printout of your games. They can usually retrieve scores from the past 48 hours.

The automatics are here to stay, and as time goes by there will be upgrades coming on line to make them even better. If nothing else, they have virtually eliminated all of those mathematical errors which used to give secretaries a lot of extra work.
