

Crown leaves its mark

She has been honored by senators, congressmen and Governor John Engler. She has spent the past year living as a queen. However, for her, the most rewarding experience has been the opportunity to help young people.

As Miss Farmington of 1996, Annette Hohl will remember the past year for the rest of her life, but she has also left an impression on many young people that will last for lifetimes.

"Working with children has been so rewarding. I've received such a wonderful response from them. I always tell them to never give up on their dreams, and to always pursue what they want to achieve in life. I believe if you're able to touch just one life, then you've made a difference," said Hohl.

After being crowned as Miss Farmington, Hohl quickly began her year of service by becoming involved with the Farmington Hills Community Commission for Children, Youth and Families. She actively went out to Farmington schools and motivated children to pursue their dreams. She even created an essay contest for fifth and sixth graders.

Hohl also tirelessly promoted "Stand for Children," an organization dedicated to helping school-aged children to reach their goals and dreams through education and perseverance.
