On both days, customers will also have an opportunity to buy regularly priced "Red Wing" bagels, which were popular during the Stanley Cup run.
Dino Greco, vice president and head of food production for Bean & Bagel, described them as "marbled white dough with cherry flavoring." Between 100- to 200 dozen will be available at each location to tie in to Bowman's appearances and Greco expects them to sell out fast.
Kaye said people who stop by those days might see a different Scotty Bowman than the one the media portrays.
"He's a personable guy," said Kaye, whose Bean & Bagel headquarters is located in West Bloomfield. "Sometimes the media makes him something he's not."
Placed on the table near Kaye as he talked was a Bean & Bagel coffee mug, signed in red felt pen by Bowman. The inscription: "To Charlie. The bagels are the best. Scotty Bowman."
The fact that Bowman chose his restaurants for the signings is something that makes Kaye proud.
"There are a zillion places trying to get Scotty Bowman to make appearances," Kaye said. "He won't prostitute himself. He never, ever asked for one dime for this. He said, 'I'll pay my own way. I'll donate my time and this is the charity I want it to go to.'" Bowman's choice was gratifying to Beaumont Hospital spokeswoman Colette Stimmell. She said Beaumont had nothing to do with organizing the Bean & Bagel charity appearance.
"It's very thoughtful of Mr. Bowman to lend his time and effort for this cause," Stimmell said. "The money raised will provide equipment, programs and services for our head-injury patients. We're very pleased to have been selected as the beneficiary."
But she emphasized that people also should try to support other organizations that are dedicated to the successful treatment and research of head injuries, such as the Brain Injury Association of Michigan.

fly easier than you can convince me that traffic wouldn't be more horrendous in that area," said Muirland Street resident Jeff Winegard.
Traffic is not the fault of the developer, said Clairview Street resident Charles Green, who favors the plan. As far as having an all-night Kmart, Green said, "When I need something in the middle of the night, I run to Meijer. I'd run to Kmart if it was there."
Another Clairview resident Loretta Saliccioli's voice nervously trembled as she made a plea for the PUD's approval.
"Most of us feel like the forgotten people," Saliccioli said. "Please allow this interested developer to come in and help us."
A PUD makes sense for an area which is zoned in a variety of ordinances, council members said.
The proposal meets all requirements of a PUD. The plan would also achieve a goal set out by the city for the area, which is designated as one of seven Special Planning Areas.
"It does supersede the zoning ordinances," Mayor Aldo Vagnozzi said. "In this district there is such a hodgepodge of ordinances, the P.U.D. seems to be the way to go."

Rep gets political training
State House Republican leadership has nominated Rep. Andrew Raczowski, R-Farmington Hills, to attend a University of Virginia program for emerging political leaders.
"This program is a valuable training experience," said House Republican Leader Ken Sikken, R-Grandville. "Those who are just starting out in their careers as elected officials, like Rep. Raczowski, benefit immensely."
"He will be able to use the talents he already has and learn to apply them to be a more effective representative for the 37th District."
The university's graduate school of business administration designed the three-day program to expand the leadership possibilities of emerging state legislators, broaden their perspectives and enable them to meet future challenges in positive ways.
"I am honored that leadership has chosen me to represent Michigan at this highly respected program," Raczowski said. "I look forward to taking what I learn and using it to do the best possible job for the people who elected me."
