After receiving 200 rejections, it would have been understandable if Rhonda Gowler Greene had given up on her dream of becoming a published children's writer.

But then a letter came from Simon & Schuster/ atheneum accepting her book "Barnyard Song." Within the next nine months she sold two more books.

This fall "Barnyard Song" and "When a Line Bends ... A Shape Begins" (Houghton Mifflin) are being released. "Barnyard Song" has been selected as a "pick of the list" by the American Booksellers for the fall. Publisher's Weekly has called "When a Line Bends," a "well-conceived, bouncy and colorful primer."

"I didn't give up," said Greene. "I got letters from editors with personal notes saying they liked my stories and asking for revisions. I did them but they still didn't take the book, but I was encouraged."

Greene became interested in writing books for children when her family moved to West Bloomfield in 1983. She had received a bachelor's degree in elementary and special education and a master's in educational media. She worked as an elementary and preschool teacher. But when the family moved Greene wanted to spend full time taking care of her two sons. A daughter and another son followed.

Reading high quality picture books to her children encouraged her to try writing.

"Most people don't realize all the hard work and waiting that go into getting a children's book published," said the West Bloomfield resident. "I sent out picture book manuscripts for 3-1/2 years and received over two hundred rejections before I made my first sale in May 1995. That was 'Barnyard Song' which has now been two years in the making."

"Barnyard Song," illustrated in a soft, humorous style by Robert Bender, has fun with barnyard sounds. Greene tells the story (for ages 3-6) of what happens to the familiar voices of the barnyard animals when they all get a cold and how the farmer nurses them back to health. The writing is done in bright, funny rhymes that develop a rich rhythm as the story moves along. "When a Line Bends ... A Shape Begins," is illustrated by first-time children's illustrator James Kaczman. His bold, geometric style and his imaginative other-world of clowns and city scenes perfectly matches Greene's lively verse about how lines become shapes. The text (preschool to 3rd grade) is often presented in the shape discussed.

A sample from "When a Line Bends": "An oval's like a circle, except it's not as stout. Two sides go in to make it thin. Two other sides go out. Oval is a turtle's shell, a way-up-high balloon, a beetle and a jellybean, the curved scoop of a spoon."

Greene said she hasn't met either of her illustrators, who were selected by the publishers. She said she didn't see the pictures for the shape book until it was published and it took her a while to get used to them but that she likes the results.

Greene, a member of the Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators and a Rochester children's book writing group, is now represented by the Curtis Brown agency in New York and has another book scheduled for release in fall 1999.

Greene is married to Gary Greene, tax director for Guardian Industries. They have four children, Matt, 17; Aaron, 15; Lianna, 12; and Brad, 10, all of whom attend West Bloomfield schools.

In a prepared release, Greene sums up her writing, "I like working with kids. I think it will be fun sharing my books with children and helping them understand the process of how books are made – from idea to finished product."

Greene will read and sign her books and give a puppet show based on "Barnyard Song" at Borders Books & Music, 30995 Orchard Lake Road Farmington Hills, 11 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 4.
