Shock receives positive reviews in debut

BASKETBALL

The Detroit Shock's debut ended in defeat, but fans such as Marylou Jansen weren't too disappointed.

The 78-69 loss to the Charlotte Sting in the season opener June 13 at the Palace of Auburn Hills was still a lot of fun for Jansen, women's basketball coach at Madonna University in Livonia. "I've been really impressed with their marketing," she said. In addition to attending the opener, she bought season tickets.

She's seen the Shock reaching out to metro Detroit. Women's basketball coaches were contacted early on about ticket sales and team activities. The men's game is more of a business, Jansen said, but the women's game is more of a sport. "The atmosphere was great out there. It was a blast."

She's found the team "very approachable. They seemed to be really going after the fan support."

Jansen, 37, is a graduate of Divine Child High School and Michigan State University. The guidance counselor at Grosse Ile High School is pleased to see more chances for younger women to excel athletically.

"I wish I could turn back the clock. The girls have more opportunities." There are more teams and more clinics. "I definitely would have been in the gym full time."

Participating in sports gives girls and young women a way to participate and feel good about themselves, she said.

Jansen is pleased to see the Shock's approach is fan-friendly and community-based. The team has a great attitude about giving back, she added.

The game's affordable, Jansen said, and a lot of fun.

Madonna forward Mary Murray didn't see the Shock opener, but made it to Monday's game, a 96-85 loss against the Cleveland Rockers. "I think it's great for young girl athletes," the Divine Child graduate said of the WNBA. Girls can see that they too can compete and win. "Girls have as equal a chance."

Murray, 21, a Madonna senior, played for two state championship teams coached by Jansen at Divine Child. At the Shock-Rockers game, she was impressed with the Shock offense, but thought the defense looked a little weak.

"Overall, I thought it was a great game," she was impressed with the ball handling and shooting, and plans to go back to see more games.

Murray sees many benefits to participating in sports for young women. "I think healthy competition is good for all people," she said.
