derful. It'll make people more aware of hospice. And there's no better place a person can be (if terminally ill), because they treat you with dignity."

Grohman, who helps oversee 160 Michigan hospice volunteers, concurred about the ultimate reason a stamp was issued. "This is to educate people about hospice care," Grohman said, "to let them know what services are available through the Hospice of Michigan" which is the largest non-profit hospice in the United States.

Hospice of Michigan offers "comprehensive, compassionate care for people nearing the end of their lives." The organization treats the terminally ill, regardless of age, illness or insurance status, emphasized Grohman. Among HOM-affiliated facilities is Noted Wysocki, the stamp is dearly needed to help publicize "what they're doing. We desperately need help in our communities with death and dying issues and people need to know the service is there."

"And that they're not going to be alone as they're passing through to the next life."
