films, including both "Addicted to Murder" titles. Another actress, Laura McLaughlin, moved to Los Angeles and appeared in two recent Clint Eastwood films.

"Actually, I feel sorry for them because I'll put in an ad and I'll get hundreds and hundreds of head shots," Lindenmuth said. "There's plenty of talented people who are looking for work."

Through subtitles, Lindenmuth's films are seen in Germany, Malaysia and Thailand as well as the UK. International exposure doesn't phase Lindenmuth, who tries to put an everyday face on vampires and other ghoul.

Others who knew Lindenmuth growing up might not have picked him for such a "bright lights" and "action" career path.

"I was pretty quiet," Lindenmuth said about his childhood. "I kept to myself."

Then again, you know what they say about the quiet ones...

Film making: Kevin Lindenmuth spends about $15,000 to make his horror and science fiction films, such as "Vampires and Other Stereotypes," pictured above.

In a city of seven million people, in two former Farmington Hills residents found each other.

While growing up in the Hills' Independence Commons area, he knew her and she knew him. Kevin Lindenmuth's sisters were friends with Audrey Geyser's. Their respective siblings even tried to pair them up.

As freshmen at the University of Michigan, the pair took in the Ann Arbor Film Festival. They didn't exactly conduct electricity on their first date.

"We didn't hit it off," Kevin said.

After college, they went their separate ways: She to North Carolina and he to New York. When Audrey moved to New York, she didn't know anyone except Kevin. She phoned him and met for lunch where they talked about their prospective careers.

"We didn't hit it off then, either," Kevin said.

On a whim, he decided to phone her. She had broken up with her boyfriend and had moved, which meant Kevin had to make three phone calls before tracking her down.

They met again.

"There was a connection there that wasn't there before," said Audrey, who is working as a therapist after starting out as a documentary film producer. "I think we grew together when we were apart."

Said Kevin five years later: "I don't even know why I was so persistent."

They dated for five years and married in October 1997. Audrey served as co-producer on her husband's drama, which will be entered into film festival competitions.

"We really work well together," said Audrey, who is a 1984 Farmington Hills Mercy High graduate.

Audrey believes coincidences were something more. "We were meant to be together," she said.

Horror: "Alien Agenda: Under the Skin" was directed by Kevin Lindenmuth, formerly of Farmington Hills. The actor above is Arthur Lundquist.

Goalkeeper to speak

Detroit Rockers indoor soccer goalkeeper Bryan "Goose" Finnerty will be the guest speaker at Faith Covenant Church Saturday, March 27.

Finnerty, a four-time National Professional Soccer League All Star, will talk about his faith and professional soccer career.

The breakfast starts at 8:30 a.m. in the church activities room. The church is at 14 Mile and Drake roads.

Finnerty is a promoter of soccer as well as substance abuse awareness. As honorary chairman for the Michigan Tri-County DARE Association, he volunteers more than 100 hours a year talking to youngsters about the aspects of staying drug free.

Tickets for the breakfast are $6 for children 12 and under and $7 for others. Tickets can be obtained by calling the church office at (248) 681-9191.
