

Highmeadow students build miniature business world

This story marks another installment of Today's Lesson, an occasional series which chronicles classroom activities in Farmington Public Schools. It is the final installment of the 1998-99 school year.

With the Mini Society Town Hall meeting in session at High-meadow Common Campus, mayor Brian Noble listed on the blackboard top concerns of other third graders.

Question: Teacher Karen Farber listens to the mini-society meeting, while student David Hayhow raises a hand to voice a concern.

Issues: During the Mini Society Town Hall meeting at Highmeadow Common Campus, secretary Jordan Lindsey lists topics of discussion.

other third graders in the classroom of teacher Karen Farber. "Even if you have a solicitor's license, you can't go up to the business."

"We need to discuss this and find out what solicitation means and what it doesn't mean," interjected Farber, moderating the town hall talk.

The Mini Society, comprised of the classes of Farber and Carol Apol, created products, operated their own businesses — and, yes, had solicitors' licenses. To get a taste of the real world of retail, they had previously visited real stores in a real city, Farmington.

"Kids found out if you put a 'No Solicitors' sign in the window, kids can't come in to sell goods in the store," said Farber, who described the Mini Society as a class project intended to help youngsters get a hands-on lesson in being thoughtful consumers.

Those in the Mini Society, which was held by fake "Super Sellers" money, needed to find out whether that also applied to their own businesses.

Some of those included the following: the hand-painted rocks (featuring the U-M logo, for example) of Lindsey Coursen and Emily Willey; laminated bookmarks, produced and sold by Alex Bugerman, David Hayhow and Ferique Kothari; or Cheryl Cuthbert's color-splattered greeting cards and stationery, created with sponges and marbles instead of paint brushes.

"If you solicit," asked one student, "what if someone doesn't want to buy it?"

"Then they don't buy it," retorted another.

That exchange, and several others, illustrated how the Highmeadow town hall session featured the same kind of free-flowing discussion as those staged by adults.

Mini Society member Matt Scott had his own creative solution to the question of whether to solicit or not. He paid $5 in $5 money for a license to carry a sandwich sign. Matt said he did better because he didn't have to pay rent.

"And more people saw you because you weren't crammed into one space," added another student.

Later during the town hall meeting, students delved into matters such as respecting others' retail space, and the items contained therein — displayed on desks, doled out for a weekly fee of a mere $12 in fake money.

"Kids came up and said, 'Do you want to buy this?' and then they dented some of our cards," lamented one student.

Farber then asked if businesses had the right to ask problem customers to leave the premises.

"Yes," said one Mini Society member.

"But they'd lose business," noted another.

Dentistry in the 90s

A PILL FOR GUM DISEASE

The treatment for chronic gum disease has long consisted of repeated scraping of bacteria from below the gum line. Now, there is a drug treatment in pill form that, when used to supplement the standard treatment, can help prevent gum disease from returning. Doxycycline hyalate is a low-dose antibiotic that counteracts collagenase, an enzyme that responds to gum bacteria by attacking the bone that anchors the teeth. Study shows that those who took doxycycline hyalate preserved 50% more gum tissue than those who did not take the antibiotic. While patients with advanced gum disease still require scaling and root planning to remove the underlying infection that is damaging gums, doxycycline hyalate can help maintain bone levels afterward. This column on chronic gum disease has been brought to you by LIVONIA VILLAGE DENTAL ASSOCIATES in the interest of better dental health. Most adults with gum disease are unaware that they have it. Periodontal disease is usually a slow, painless, progressive disease. You need not lose your teeth to gum disease. If diagnosed early, it can be saved. We stress preventative dental health care for the whole family. We're located at 19171 Merriman Road, where we are currently accepting new patients. Please call 478-2110 to schedule an appointment. Smiles are our business. We feature "Twilight Sleep," dentistry without fear.

A3. Doxycycline hyalate is not a preventative measure and is prescribed only when brushing and flossing cannot control gum disease.

FINANCING THE AMERICAN DREAM

Computer bid on board agenda

The Farmington school board, during Tuesday's 7:30 p.m. meeting at the Lewis Schulman Administrative Center, is expected to award a $3.1 million bid for the purchase of about 1,600 computers, of which 80 are laptops.

Cheryl Cannon, assistant superintendent of business and operational services, said the bid would include monitors, printers and installation, among other elements.

Money for the purchase will come out of a special budget fund established two years ago and is not part of the $93.1 million bond issue approved by voters in September 1997.

Eight companies bid for the job, said Dan Sutton, director of information technology. The computers would be installed over the summer and into fall, if needed.
