As Denise DeRaud played Chinese jump rope with her daughters, she could feel her strength coming back. It was a significant event for the 36-year-old Redford resident, who was just three months out from a bone marrow transplant.

The weakness she felt in her arms and legs was a reminder of the physical limitations she still faced, but, mentally, the value of the moment was overwhelming.

She was alive and being a mom to her two young daughters - something she cherished more than anything.

Turn of events

What DeRaud considered to be a "normal" life with her husband, Mark, and daughters, Shira and Colette, was turned upside down in January when she was diagnosed with an aggressive precursor to leukemia.

Denise had myelodysplastic syndrome (MDS), which had already transformed to acute leukemia, said her physician Dr. Voravit Ratanathathorn, associate professor of internal medicine - University of Michigan.

"Patients who had the type of leukemia transformed from MDS are not curable with conventional chemotherapy. The only curative treatment is to perform a bone marrow or stem cell transplantation," said Ratanathathorn.

Within a month she was undergoing an initial treatment of chemotherapy to destroy diseased bone marrow. She was back in the hospital at the end of April preparing both her mind and body for a bone marrow transplant.

One of DeRaud's two sisters, Annette Russo of New York, tested positive as a perfect match to be a bone marrow donor.

The morning of the transplant, May 10, DeRaud, Russo and their other sister, Michele Rice of Canton, gathered quietly in her hospital room to hold hands and pray.

"When we got to U of M, we went straight up to Denise's room and waited a few minutes for her to wake up. Then I told them both that we needed to hold hands and meditate together, the three of us - in order to gain strength," said Russo.

The women reluctantly separated so that Denise could get the rest she was desperate for after a grueling bout of chemotherapy while Russo went to another floor at the hospital and spent the next six hours having her bone marrow harvested.

During the procedure she experienced numbness in her limbs and mouth area, a common occurrence in bone marrow donors. As the marrow is being harvested, the donor is intravenously administered calcium that is stripped away during the collection. Her numbness however, became more profound, and doctors feared they would have to stop the procedure because she was experiencing one of the worst cases of hypocalcemia (too much calcium for her body to absorb) they had seen.

"After that, I pretended that I was okay," recalled Russo. "After they unhooked me, the doctor had to come check me out.... He wanted to keep an eye on me for a few hours - I didn't care.... I lasted through the entire collection."

After all the cells were harvested, the bone marrow transplant team from the bone and marrow stem cell transplant
