Walk from page A3

"Ron's program reaches students - they respond to him," said Mechigan. "I believe the unique outlook Ron's able to provide motivates and inspires people in a way they may not have experienced before."

"This is the best program I have had the opportunity to support."

Ironically, Bachman has found a career in reaching out to the children he once avoided.

"Kids can be so cruel," said Bachman. "They have a way of pointing and laughing that is completely unnerving in the face of their youth and innocence."

After years of being teased and taunted, Bachman decided to eradicate painful past experiences with adolescents by doing something to try and change their attitudes.

"Not knowing - ignorance - is where fear and prejudice are born," Bachman said. "The only way to change things is to let them see how normal I really am, to help make them comfortable with handicapped people."

"I want people, especially children, to understand that being different doesn't mean being strange or untouchable."

Bachman went on to say, "I want them to realize that different is just different, and nothing more. I'm a regular person just like anyone else. I can walk, I can drive, I can do almost anything that anyone else can do. I want them to see that and to understand that."

Many would claim that Bachman's life has been anything but regular. His incredible life experiences made him the subject of a 1996 independent film produced and directed by former TV producer Kathy Vander.

Entitled "Walk This Way," the 30-minute documentary captures the remarkable story of a man who refused to give himself over to the cards he was dealt at birth.

"Walk This Way" has won numerous awards, including the CINE Golden Eagle Award, the Golden Apple from the National Educational Media Network, honors from the National Council on Family Relations, an Indie Award, and a People's Choice for documentary films.

"Walk This Way" recently received an invitation to be shown at the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Film Series in February.

Bachman's spirit, enthusiasm, and love of life have inspired, touched, and transformed the thousands of people he has met.

In retrospect Ron simply states, "It has been a good thing for me to go to the schools and meet parents, administrators and especially the kids. I get to tell them, 'Hey, look here. If I can accomplish all of the things in my life that I'm proud of, without legs, just imagine what you can do!'"

Hills again hosts Red Cross blood drive

The Farmington Hills City Blood Drive will be held from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursday, Jan. 27, at Fire Station No. 5.

According to the American Red Cross, each pint of donated blood provides hospitals with red blood cells, used in operations; plasma, a clear hemoglobin used in treating victims of severe burns and trauma; platelets used to heal internal and external bleeding, commonly among children with sickle cell anemia and leukemia; and immune globulin, which fights over 70 diseases and is in great demand.

Every 20 seconds, someone in Michigan needs blood, a demand for more than 250,000 pints annually.

Because only five percent of eligible adults donate, the Red Cross imports blood products daily, to sustain the community's blood supply.

There has been a 25 percent decrease in blood donations in southeastern Michigan in the last 10 years, and a 103 percent increase in imported blood, which costs upwards of $6 million to bring in from other areas of the Midwest.

For more information about the local blood drive, or to make an appointment, call 248-426-4400.

Fire Station No. 5 is located at 31455 11 Mile.
