the Moody Blues' first new recording since 1981, and classics such as "Nights in White Satin" and "I'm Just a Singer (In a Rock 'n' Roll Band)." The Ann Arbor concert is part of a tour that will take the Moody Blues through the U.S. and England until the end of April. A legend in pop history, the group is in much demand. Members will be lucky to have one day off a week during stops in the Midwest.

"None of us really live in England anymore though we maintain homes there," said Edge. "We were turning up in Soho (London) and making albums like a bunch of Troglodytes when one of us went to do some work on someone else's album at Studio Mulinetti. It was a cliff (studio engineer) Danilo Madonia's mother made us great Italian food."

Like the old days

"It was more like the old days. And it was the first time we produced ourselves. We were conscious of not putting strains on the bands. We worked in two to three week stretches of time over the last two years with regards to our whistling. For our last album we went in and worked three months straight. Another first was who ever wrote the song going to produce it. The rest of us could throw in ideas and they were used or not. It didn't bother us if they weren't because you realized when it was your song, you'd get to produce it."

Nothing changes

The Hill Auditorium audience will hear Edge's poem "Nothing Changes" in the second half of the program along with oldies like "Your Wildest Dreams." Edge had been carrying the poem around for some time before he arriving at Studio Mulinetti in Italy. Ominous lyrics speak of winter's war and a dark future if we do not change.

"We've got the toys now to screw things up," said Edge. "We're standing at the crossroads. I have an optimistic heart, but a pessimistic brain. The Internet is breaking down the barriers. The positive side is we'll be a mono-culture."

Musical family

Born in Birmingham, England, Edge grew up listening to everything from Chopin to Caruso so it came as no surprise to his parents when he chose a musical career.

"My father was an untrained opera singer who used to sing in Music Hall as it's called in England. You know as Vaudeville here in the States," said Edge. "Mom was a pianist, mostly for fun. I started playing at age 11. I heard Bill Haley and the Comets play '10 Little Indian Boys' and got interested in rock 'n' roll from there. In my early days, I played

■ I know what it's like to be a fan. I went to see Elton John six or seven years ago and was disappointed because he didn't do any of the old material, only the new. That's why I like doing the old material. I never get fed up performing on stage and watching people enjoy themselves.

snare in a marching band (at church) then my parents bought me a drum kit and put up with it."

Edge moved to London at age 22 to play with the R & B Prowlers, and the Silhouettes until joining with Ray Thomas and Mike Pinder to form the Moody Blues. Justin Hayward and John Lodge joined them shortly thereafter. Released in 1966 their ground-breaking album, "Days of Future Passed," remained on Billboard charts for more than two years. Recorded in stereo and with a symphony orchestra, it was one of the very first concept albums.

"I started playing for 22," said Edge, who during the Moody Blues four-year run in the mid-1970s recorded two solo albums — "Kick On Your Muddy Boots" and "Paradise Ballroom." "You don't gradually work your way up. You get a break or not. I've been with the Moody Blues 36 years, but worked as a professional drummer for 38 years. My dad's definition of a professional musician is somebody who would rather play than starve."

Intense schedule

Edge is looking forward to returning to Ann Arbor even though he's only been home nine days since Aug. 13 due to his intense touring schedule and family illness. He's always liked playing in Ann Arbor, at Pine Knob and other places in and Detroit with the Moody Blues. As a thank you to their fans, the group will do two sets each sets that will include many oldies. Edge never tires of playing the songs from "In Search of the Lost Chord," "On the Threshold of a Dream" and "Seventh Sojourn," to name a few of the Moody Blues' top-selling albums.

"I know what it's like to be a fan. I went to see Elton John six or seven years ago and was disappointed because he didn't do any of the old material, only the new," said Edge. "That's why I like doing the old material. I never get fed up performing on stage and watching people enjoy themselves."

Olupus-style. "We try and make Cupid's night out a very interactive experience," said Jacokes. "Most of our shows have interaction, but not as grand as C.N.O." Those still Valentine-less need not worry. Just enter Olupus' "Favorite Valentine Contest" by writing 49 to 51 explaining why you should be the band's valentine. Expect a barrage of surprises, including a handful of new songs to the set list — a mix of covers and originals.

"This year we are debuting at least three brand new songs," Jacokes added. "They become Valentines for the fans who know our stuff well. We stick to the relationship songs for this show, the boy-meets-girl songs. Some of them are love songs. But we also realize that, for some people, Valentine's day is a good day to be bitter about defunct relationships, so we play a fair share of love-gone-wrong songs."

There's something for everyone. But those who dare sit in the front row, better be fans of Barry White-style crooning and close contact; Davidson draws his energy from the audience, giving those off-stage a chance at the limelight. "I love our audience," he said. "I love fans. There, that's the performance high," he said, pointing off-stage as the lights fade.

Express your love with a song on Valentine's Day

Even if you can't carry a tune, you can send your Valentine a song from your heart.

The Renaissance Chorus, a barbershop quartet, will serenade your sweetheart at home, work or anywhere else you choose in the Wayne, Westland, Garden City, or Livonia area.

Your thoughtfulness will be remembered, too. In addition to a Valentine's serenade, the person of your choosing will receive a red rose and personalized Valentine's Day card. The vocalists will even deliver your special personal gift.

The cost for a Singing Valentine is $40. Call now to schedule the singers between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m., Monday, Feb. 14.
