forfeit his match with John Pocock at 145 after suffering a puncture wound on the top of the head.

"They had a pretty good match going," Boyar said, guessing the injury was caused, inadvertently, by one of Pocock's teeth. "Not that it was intentional or anything. It must have hit a blood vein."

Consequently, Farmington used all of the five minutes allotted for what is called blood time and had to forfeit the bout.

"Had he been able to finish the match and James not been pinned, we would've won the match," Boyar said, adding even a technical fall (five points) would have left the Chiefs one point short in the final tally.

Obviously, in such a close match, the Chiefs can point to several what-if situations, Boyar added.

Farmington had a chance at 152, also. Ostach was ahead of Canton's Scott McKee, 7-1, and needed one more point for a major decision that would've given the Falcons four teams points instead of three.

"He needed a takedown for a major decision and wasn't able to get it," Boyar said. "He went for it, slipped and the score ended up being 9-4."

"There are several places you could look back and say we could have won that match."

The name was true for Canton. "They had a chance to win it at 140 when Chris Hoesy was going against Aaron Turk," Boyar said. The score was 8-1, and they needed one more takedown themselves. "I'm sure they're looking back at that score, too."

Boyar elected to throw the 189 weight class rather than put an inexperienced and underweight wrestler on the mat against Canton's Phil Rothwell, who was the runner-up in the Observerland Tournament.

"We would've been giving up 20 pounds, and that's asking a lot of a freshman, not to get pinned by an experienced wrestler," Boyar said. "There's no use risking a young wrestler like that."

Farmington's wrestler, the only other option at that point, weighed in at 162.1 pounds and barely qualified for the 171 division; whereas, Rothwell registered 182.9 pounds.

The Falcons lost to the Chiefs in a double dual at Monroe in December, 41-33.

Farmington didn't have 119-pound Jon Simmons for that match. He was recovering from mono and didn't have clearance from his doctor to compete. Simmons won by decision Thursday.

The other turnarounds came from Tom Mahon (140) and Kyle Domagalski (215).

GYMNASTICS

an all-around score of 35.625. She scored a 9.175 on bars and a 9.10 on floor exercise.

Sarah Berman also did well at the Junior division of Level 7, tying for ninth overall with a score of 34.15. She placed second on vault with a score of 9.25.

Clara Seymour, who also competes for the Farmington unified high school team, won the Level 8 junior division with an all-around score of 35.65.

She placed first on bars with a score of 9.0 and first on floor with a score of 9.35, which was the highest event score for all of Level 8, 9 and 10.

In Level 9 competition, Andrea Bentley made her comeback from nearly a year of rehabilitation from an elbow injury.

She finished second overall in the junior division, placing second on floor exercise and uneven parallel bars, third on vault and balance beam.

Keri Monstrola, in her first year at Level 9, placed fourth overall in the junior division, taking second on balance beam and fourth on vault, bars and floor exercise.

Level 10 senior competition included Michelle Wasielewski and Jennifer Sturgis. Wasielewski placed first all-around, earning her award by placing first on vault with a score of 8.725 and beam with a score of 9.125.

In 1999, Sturgis won the national beam competition as a Level 9 gymnast. She placed second all-around in Winterfest as a Level 10 senior gymnast. Her best score was a 9.3 on the floor exercise, the highest Level 10 event score.

Farmington features Winterfest winners

Farmington Gymnastics Center optional gymnasts competed at their annual Winterfest held in Farmington Hills Feb. 5-6.

The Level 7 team placed third overall, and several of the gymnasts achieved first in all-around scores.

Michelle Jordan took first overall in the Level 7 child division with a 35.9 all-around score. She scored a 9.025 on vault and a 9.375 on bars; both were first-place scores. Her 9.375 was the highest Level 7 event score.

Alyse Quinn placed third in the Level 7 junior division with
