"We come here every year," said Amy Branscome. She brought her three children, ages 10, 4 and 4 months. "The kids like the games and the food. We really like to see what the police department and fire department are doing."

The Farmington Hills Police Department offered a 911 demonstration. Children viewed a variety of photographs, for example, of a man falling off a ladder. They then picked up a phone and described the scene to a dispatcher on another phone, standing across the table. All children were given praise and an informational packet. The pony rides were perhaps the biggest attraction, with about 50 parents and children in line at a time to take a circular stroll.

Choices: Kid rides went from traditional train rides to make-believe space travel.
