Know-it-alls
During my teenage years, we used to have a name for someone who was always asserting to know everything—he or she was a "know-it-all." Whenever a various discussion got a little heated, it would quite often end with someone being called a "know-it-all." I once heard it said that "being right all of the time can be awfully lonely." Being human, we have to accept that it is normal to make mistakes, and perhaps it is even possible to be wrong once in a while. No one likes a person that is constantly letting us know, especially in a condescending manner, that their way of thinking is always right. There is nothing wrong with being right; it is how we reflect our way of thinking to others. A skillful conversationalist can express ideas and get his way of thinking across without offending anyone. Once you have offended or hurt someone, it is difficult, if not impossible to make them see your side of an argument. God wants us to treat others as we would like to be treated, and being considerate of one's feelings reflects the love of God.
A gentle answer quells anger, but a harsh one stirs it up
