By JERRY ROSS

Children are less affected by the violence they witness on their TV screens than they are by their parents' attitudes toward violence. They have internalized these attitudes even before they settle down in front of the picture tube at the tender age of 4 or 5. And these attitudes, not the violence they see, determine their reactions and their behavior. If they are happy, healthy children with loving parents, then their minor annoyances will be forgotten as they watch the struggle between here and villain or TV. If they are maldigisted, neglected, mistreated or underprivileged, the violence they watch can add to their frustration and find outlet in antisocial action.

Heroes and villains are standard fare on television. and for the best viewing of your favorite shows, confer with our television experts at BEECH TELE-VISION, service center, 29457 W. Six Mile Rd., sales center, 26158 W. Six Mile Rd., Detroit, open HELPFUL HINT: When patching wallpaper, tear the patch into a round shape. Tearing the paper makes a feather-type patch which is less noticeable than a scissor cut patch.
