Raczkowski said. "I see very few people in public service I would put my faith in. They only seemed worried about the next election."

Getting big banks to stay in

Michigan is also an issue.

"It's hard to find large lending institutions here," he said.

When it comes to helping Michigan, he said Levin has been "AWOL."

Despite running against a stronghold, Raczkowski said he is positive about his chances. "People said I couldn't win when I ran for representative," he said.
