Drama teacher honored

The American Heart Association recently honored Mercy High School drama teacher, Ron Sill and the school administration for their commitment to improving the chain of survival in their school and their community at the third annual American Heartsaver Day celebration.

Sill is credited with bringing the issue of CPR training to the attention of the school's administration. He participated in a community training program, for community training program for the police department and has recently become a certified CPR instructor by the American Heart Association.

Sill also advised Mercy of the reasons to purchase an AED and the school quickly agreed to do so. Since the school purchase the AED, Sill has trained several teachers and a dozen students how to do CPR and to use the AED. He plans to train many more students to save lives in the future. the future.
