OUR MENTAL HEALTH

How and when to choose a therapist

Many years ago a psychiatrist men-tor of mine told me that there used to be a law requiring a psychiatrist to have a separate door for a patient to leave his office so they wouldn't have to go out through the waiting room area and possibly be seen by someone they knew.

and possibly be seen by someone they knew.

We have come a long way since then in our field of mental health care. Stigmas about being 'in therapy' have decreased, although are not entirely eliminated. Myths still exist.

Generally, people seek the help of mental health professional when they experience more distress in their lives than they want to continue to live with. This distress usually takes the form of anxiety and/or depression. The source of this distress can come from many places. Some are situational reactions to a life crisis or loss. Some stem from internal conflicts of an unbalanced emotional life. Some come from the stress of every day living which includes parenting, divorce, unemployment, and health problems such as traumatic brain injuries and cancer. Some come from mental illness such as schikophrenia and bipolar dilacrder (formally called manic depression).

When attempts to 'pull yourself up by your boot straps' fail and talking to a trusted friend, family member, or clergy has not brought enough lasting rollef from emotional distress, it is time to consider a mental health professional.

Types of therapists

Under the title of "mental health professional" or "psychotherapist," there are many different types of professionals in the field. They differ in educational background, certification and licensure and by title.

Psychologists — In Michigan one must be licensed to practice psychology. Some clinical psychologys are decreased to practice psychology. Some clinical psychologists have carned a doctorate degree and some have studied through graduate school and hold a master's degree.

Social workers — In Michigan, there is certification for social workers. Typically, a social worker-psychotherapist has attained a master's degree from a graduate school of social work and has had experience in the specialty practice of psychotherapy.

Counselors—This category is relatively new and includes people who have graduated from a school of rehabilitation counseling. They typically specialize in counseling for persons with disabilities such as traumatic brain injuries and occupational injuries.

with disabilities such as traumate brain injuries and occupational injuries.

Psychiatrists – They are medical physicians who have specialized in the treatment of metal illness.

Psychoanalysts – These have much advanced training in psychotherapy and psychoanalysis.

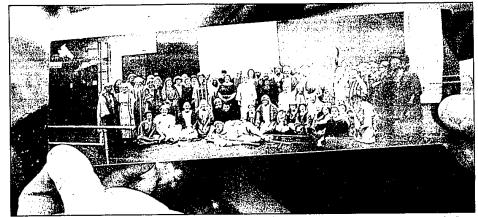

Cartiffied counselors – They may specialize in substance abuse counseling, gambling counseling, refrecounseling, and school counseling. In Michigan we now have certification in each of these disciplines.

Finally, there is Diplomate Status. A diplomate is a professional from any of the above fields who has been evaluated by an objective board of their peers and has attained significant distinction in training, education, professionalism and contribution to their field, as compared to the general population of practitioners.

Selecting a therapist

Selecting a therapist

Selecting a therapist
A good place to start is with your family dector or clergy. When this is not available, a referral from a trusted friend who has had a good experience with a therapist is a way to go.
Keep in mind that it is not necessariity the ecademic background or the professional title that identifies a competent psychotherapist that will be a good match for you. I advise people to make Please see HEALTH, C9

STATT PHOTO BY BILL BRESLER

Just the gang: Tucked in the sun visor of his pickup truck, Dean Unick keeps a photo taken with fellow cast members of the opera "Samson and Delilah." Dean is in the foreground, reclining.

From toolbelt to La Traviata

He's a carpenter by day, opera singer by night

By day, Dean Unick of Farmington Hills can be found digging ditches or crawling around in attics. All that dirty work, he concedes, goes with being a carpenter and independent contractor. But after a quick shower and good-bye to his family, he's transformed like Clark Kent into his nighttime self: Opera singer with the prestigious Michigan Opera Theatre and Rackham Symphony Choir.

What: A gospel-jazz version the Messiah rtne messian Who: Production features Who: Production features soloists Rodrick Dixon, tenor; Alfreda Burke, sopranc; and Vivian Cherry, mezzo-soprano, and jazz artista Marcus Belgrave, Dr. Teddy Harris Jr. Larry Nozaro and George Benson. A 36-plece orchestre will perform along with the Little Rock Beptist Church Choir and Reckham Symphony Choir. When: 3 p.m. Sunday, March 10

Where: Little Rock Beptist Church, Woodward at Chicago, in Datrolt.
Tickets: $18; $15 in advance; $10 for students. For information, cell (313) 272-0333.

Michigan Opera Incaste and American Michigan University of American Michigan University of Michigan University of American Michigan University of Michigan University of American Michigan University of Michigan University of Michigan University of Michigan Opera Incaste and American Michigan University of Michigan University and later was in the first graduating class of Western Michigan University. Unick, 49, says he enjoyed singing but felt shy about it, and so con-fined himself to the shower or "in the Michigan University shower or "in the truck with the windows closed.

Rokets: $18; $15 In dows closed."
His sister, Dani Unick, now of southern California, piqued his interest in production she'd attended. Despite working a creative outlet. He auditioned for a production and 10 days later. Twee Ripring crims to pend. and 10 days later, "I was flinging coins at people's feet" as the Duke in Two Gentlemen of Verona, the musical version of Shakespeare's play, at Mercy College.

A one-line newspaper ad for auditions, spotted tices opera in the cab up truck while traveling to his day job. carpentry.

STAFF PHOTO BY BILL BRESLER

by his non-singing wife, Toni, led Unick and his bass voice to the Michigan Opera Theatre in 1983. Since his first show, Aida, he has continued to sing with the company at various Detroit loca-tions, including the Music Hall, Fisher Theatre and Masonic Auditorium. "I can't say enough about the acoustics" at MOT's current home in about the acoustics" at MOT's current home in the Detroit Opera House, he adds, where "you can be front and center, facing 3,000 seats, and people can hear every word you say."

As a member of his union, the American Guild of Musical Arts, Unick is paid for performances and every hour of rehearsal with the MOT. But he is equally enthusiastic about his unpaid vocal performances with the Rackham Symphony Choir. He joined the choir about four years ago with the show King David. Last fall, between the two companies to took part in five productions. two companies, he took part in five productions.

Two or three were in rehearsal while the others were standed.

Unick gives kudos to Suzanne Mallare Acton Unick gives kudos to Suzanne Mallare Acton for her fine work as chorus master of the MOT. The maestra also is musical director for RSC, which is in rehearsals for Too Hot to Handel - a gospel-jazz version of Handel's Messich - being performed March 10 at Little Rock Baptist Church in Detroit. Unick also is rehearsing free MOT's production of Othello in April. After the concerts, he says he plans to take some time off to be with Toni and their son Gabe. 9, and daughter Lannon, nearly 15. His outdoor interests include sailing, skiing and golfing.

For now, Unick says he's behind in learning his parts and will put in more study time with his tapes. So don't be surprised if pulling up to you in traffic sometime soon is a burly guy in a pickup truck wearing earphones, who appears to be singing his heart out.

That would be Dean Unick, opera singer.

Local woman helps others preserve family history

Donna Ellis never thought much

Donna Blis never thought much about preserving her family history until she lost a piece of it that she can never get hack.

When her mother passed away in 1884, Ellis realized she had neglected the opportant questions about her life story.

important questions above the first story. "I found myself reflecting," the Farm-ington Hills resident said. 'I had a lot of regrets. So in order to avoid my own family facing the same feeling, I start-ed in 1989 capturing my own family stories."

Ultimately, the "Family Matters" project took six years to complete. Ellis wrote some, but contributions came from about 20 family members, includ-

Donna Fills

project took six years to complete. Ellis wrote some, but contributions came from about 20 family members, including the children.

"It was everybody's book," Ellis said.
Partly because she wanted to help others capture their life stories and partly as a tribute to her mother, Ellis became a "personal historian," helping

The most difficult situation she has encountered in her work with others has been when people say, "I have no one left to leave it to." But even for those who have no living relatives, a personal history can be important to the history of their community.

Her clients are motivated by a variety of factors. Some want to recognize a loved one's contributions, others have been through a traumatic experience, like illness, divorce or the death of a loved one. She encourages people who have been "players on the world stage" sonal history) for her grandchildren. She wanted them to know her other than as 'grandma'. Ellis said.

The woman also had a long career in the film industry, for which she received a life-time achievement award. Her story is now archived at the Farmington Library.

"When I speak to genealogical groups, one of the things I stress is genealogy begins with them, not with their parents," she said. "If there's ever going to be a connection with the future, it's got to start with you."

The most difficult situation she has encountered in her work with others has been when people say, "I have no one left to leave it to." But even for those who have no living relatives, a personal history can be important to the history of their community.

Her clients are motivated by a variety of factors. Some want to recognize a loved one's contributions, others have the intended by a variety of factors. Some want to recognize a loved one's contributions, others have the intended by a variety of factors. Some want to recognize a loved one's contributions, others have the intended by a variety of factors. Some want to recognize a loved one's contributions, others have the intended by a variety of factors.

back."
For more information or assistance with compiling a family or personal history, contact Ellis at 248-489-1961 or via e-mail at donnabellis@ hotmail.com; her Web site is www.preserveyourhistory.com on the Internet.

sdargay@oe.homecomm.net