Remember, when kids are reluctant to try things you have several effective strategies to help them out. You can suggest that they "net like" they can do it, show respect for their struggles or use courage building phrases. Most important, you can show your belief in their capabilities. Children see themselves through their parent's eyes. When you see your child as helpless, she will feel helpless, but by seeing a child as having the capability to do things, even hard, tricky things, you give her the courage to believe in herself.
