Parks and Recreation budget. Nancy Coomondores, director of the city's arts commission, said the barn will be a great place to host upcoming concerts and shows.
Previously, the commission had to use halls at the Costick Activities Center, which does not have an auditorium setting. "We've done the best with the facilities we have," she said. "However, we're looking forward to have the use of an actual auditorium. We rented out the Civic Theater (in downtown Farmington) for a performance and it was quickly sold out. So it's obvious there's a desire for these type of events." She added the Costick Center will still be suitable for some performances in the future.

Phil Hadley, project manager for the new facility, which is being built on 12 Mile between Orchard Lake and Farmington Roads near the site of the old barn, said construction for the new facility is on schedule. "All the foundations are in, including the orchestra pit," he said.

He said if the weather cooperates, the new Barn should open in August.

It's not only advanced arthritis.

She's someone's grandmother.

She's seen a lot in her time. That's why, at Botsford, we see her as much more than a patient. We see her as a loving and dearly loved parent and grandparent. So along with prevention, diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation, we provide another vital ingredient - the nurturing and encouragement needed by a person facing the challenges that come with advancing years. Whether it's an exercise class, physical therapy or joint replacement that's needed, our full continuum of care is available at all times for treatment and support. We know that she'd much rather be home with a child in her lap, than be in the hospital with a doctor at her side. Botsford Care does everything possible to make that possible.
