DISAPPEARING OH NOHILLA

Amongother animals notable of size, beenty, singularity of or the relue of their fur or horns, which are being driven mon or less close to extinction by hunters, is the chinchills of South America. This little snimal has its home prin-icipally in the ranges of the Andes in Ghile and Bolivia. It burrows in tining and honey. It out our the ground, and hears a general resemblismoe to arati-satespit that it is covered with a silky, light gray fur, which has long been a favorite in the markets of the world. Of lateyears chinchillas-have heen-slaughtered in season and out of sayson, until now they are threatened with until now they are threaten extinction. The usual method of the hunters is to chase with dogs, the for terrier being particularly skillful in canturing them.
