FESTIVAL

Wayne State's Gullen Mall, will feature the arts and crafts of 100 area children.

Jennifer Gaynett, 10, of Farmington Hills is one of those children who will be showing their own art in Gullen Mall. She got a tip about the show from her grandmother.

"She got a brochure about the show in the mall," Gaynett said. "She showed it to me and I thought it would be interesting."

She will display her hand-painted flowerpots. She took pictures of her work and sent them to festival organizers. They judged all of the entries and she was one of the lucky few who got the nod.

The sponge-painted, hand-drawn pieces will be up for sale in the mall on Saturday. There isn't a price on them yet. Gaynett's mother, who has sold ceramic cats at other shows, will help her with the pricing duties.

Aside from the 100-plus juried artists displaying their crafts, there will be more than 60 hands-on activities, 10 performance stages, a literary festival, European street theater and several different types of food.

That's a lot of culture to pack into a weekend.

Bauder said the event brings all facets of the city's artistic community together in a way that flags the cultural center nicely.

"People don't normally think of coming downtown for culture," she said. "This will change that."
